Skill Builder

Researchers at the University of Southern California discovered recently that children can hone their fine motor skills up to the age of 16. "This tells us that it's never too late to correct messy writing or even to learn to play a musical instrument such as the piano", says Francisco Valero-Cuevas, PhD. "The brain is still able to learn."

The Arts-Smart Connection

The next time you endure a screeching violin or discover finger-paint on the wall take heart: It will all be worth it. Researchers at Michigan State University studied honors grads who majored in science tech, engineering or math and found that they had received up to eight times more exposure to the arts as kids than the general public. Rex LaMore, Ph.D., speculates that activities like music, photography and crafts boost imagination and intuition, skills that are critical to solving complex problems.
